PLAYING THE GAME

Fatima Daas

The second novel from the author of the literary phenomenon La Petite Dernière, exploring teenagers' aspirations and how they can be stifled by the educational system

Editions de l'Olivier (France, August 2025) – 180 pp

After the departure of her husband O, Aïsha, a caring and loving mother, is left to raise her two daughters, Kayden and Shadi, on her own. We follow Kayden's journey from the start of her sophomore year in high school to graduation, her encounter with her literature teacher Garance Fontaine, with whom an ambiguous dynamic of power and control emerges, and who persuades Kayden to enroll in an affirmative action program to get into a prestigious university. Kayden is torn between her personal aspirations and the idea of success imposed by the academic system.

Through the characters of sharp-witted teenagers who struggle to understand the challenges of the Republican school system, Fatima Daas offers a vivid portrayal of urban youth, highlighting their close-knit friendships, solidarity, and their struggle to find their place in an individual trajectory while dealing with collective determinisms.

LAST SNOW

Pierre Yergeau

A delicate and honest autofiction about romantic passion, grief, friendship, and new beginnings

Editions Phebus (August 2025) - 192 pp

In their glass-walled house, nestled among mountains and lakes, the narrator lives according to the rhythm of his wife's medical appointments as she battles cancer. Seven years in a bubble, where physical contact is reduced to caregiving, and emotions are left unspoken.

After his wife's death, the narrator spirals into a self-destructive phase, tethered to reality only by his dog, Elios, whose constant presence and unconditional affection offer a measure of solace. Another lifeline appears in Citron, a woman he meets on Instagram. They begin exchanging glimpses of their contrasting lives—hers in a cramped Parisian studio, caught in the whirlwind of city life; his in the vast solitude of his Laurentian home. Then comes Sidonie, whose arrival unleashes a storm of emotion. Their intense relationship slowly rekindles his will to live.

With sparse, understated prose, Yergo evokes the rawness of grief and the slow reawakening of emotions and senses dulled by years of sorrow. The non-linear narrative, shifting between different moments of the narrator's life, delicately traces the web of human connection—and how each relationship leaves a lasting imprint on who we become. A novel to be situated somewhere between The Year of Magical Thinking by Joan Didion and Simple Passion by Annie Ernaux.

Simon Chevrier

A remarkable debut novel, written in fragments, that explores seduction, grief
and the search for oneself

Editions Stock (January 2025) - 192 pp

The narrator of Photo Upon Request is a man in his late twenties, in search of emotions and validation. He lives in a shared apartment, looks for a job, meets men on Grindr, and supplements his income by offering sexual services through the app Giton.

When he sees a black-and-white photo taken by the American photographer Peter Hujar, hanging above a bed—a young man with his body folded, his toe brought to his mouth like a child's thumb, the shock is sudden, brutal. Who is this man? What is his story? Thus begins an investigation that gradually takes on the shape of a rebirth.

Photo upon request paints a poignant portrait of a young man in search of meaning, but don't be deceived by its nonchalance. Beneath the surface, the emotion builds, intensifying until it grips you by the throat.

PRAISE

"The portrait of a young man, a part-time prostitute, raw, hyper-realistic, and understated, like so many sharp fragments of a new lover's discourse."

Gérard Lefort, Les Inrocks

"Simon Chevrier's writing, sober and clear, excels at capturing a contemporary young man's world imbued with the literary influence of 'the elders', such as Guillaume Dustan or Denis Belloc. His narrative becomes particularly profound when he addresses the death of his father and the love he had for him (...). It is equally compelling when he explores his distance from masculinity."

Stéphane Elles, Télérama

"With raw, disarming sincerity, the lucid and unflinching prose of this debut novel resonates through its refusal to charm.[...] Simon Chevrier is a writer to watch."

Philippe-Jean Catinchi, Le Monde

THE AUTHOR

Simon Chevrier (1992) holds a degree in English. He wrote his first novel, Photo upon request as part of the Master's program in Creative Writing of Le Havre University, from which he graduated in June 2023.

Caroline Dawson

A memoir bordering the sociological autobiography on immigration and how to embrace a new culture without betraying your origins

Editions du Remue-Ménage (Québec, 2020) - 256 pp

Caroline is seven years old when her family flees Pinochet's regime, leaving Chile for Montreal on Christmas Eve, 1986. Once in Canada, Caroline accompanies her parents as they clean banks at night. WOJCIECH TOCHMAN'S TRILOGY

Bosnia – Rwanda - Cambodia

Since the early 2000s, Wojciech Tochman has built a significant body of work that explores the darkest aspects of human nature with a trilogy dedicated to the consequences of genocides: Like eating a stone (2005) on Bosnia, Today We're Going to Draw Death (2010) about Rwanda, and Roosters Crow, Dogs Cry (2019) on Cambodia.

- Rights sold in fourteen countries
- Over 100 000 copies sold in Poland

In this triptych, Tochman raises questions about how to move forward after the unimaginable has occurred. How does one continue to live, and sometimes coexist, with one's former tormentor or victim? How does one grieve when the body of a loved one has never been found, and the circumstances of their death remain unknown? How do such outbursts of violence affect the mental health of an entire nation?

Wojciech Tochman gives a voice to those who have experienced the tragedy, both perpetrators and victims. He is a portraitist who presents individual destinies. His writing is sparse and sober, and his sense of composition is striking. His prose presents the facts without explaining or taking sides. It goes straight to the point and compels us to confront what we might prefer to ignore.

This approach places him alongside writers such as Hanna Krall, Svetlana Alexievich, Florence Aubenas, and representatives of the new American journalism of the 1960s-70s. He won the Kapuściński Prize in 2016 and has been twice a finalist for the Nike Literary Award.

PRAISE

"[Tochman's] style is all the more powerful for its restraint: outrage speaks terribly for itself, needs no hype, no color."

Sunday Times (UK)

"[Tochman] relies on suggestive details, pungent quotes and simple, understated prose that is powerful in its own way."

Matthew Price, The New York Times Book Review

THIS LAKE

Jonathan Hope

A poetic investigation about a Canadian lake, blending science, reflections on language, personal memories, and a healthy dose of absurd humor

Editions Quartz (Québec, 2024) – 98 pp

"I repeat: this lake and everything that lives in it, nothing more ordinary, it's barely a subject. I'm surprised to be talking about it. Still, pointing it out is more complicated than it seems."

In an unnamed city, located in an indeterminate region of Canada, a man embarks on an investigation about the nearby lake. He is determined to explore all its facets: its appearance, its geometry, the elements surrounding it, its environmental impact... We follow him step by step in this unique exploration, a poetic reflection that invites us to discover his perception of the lake, illuminated by his experiences and memories.

In his attempt, the narrator of This Lake reinvents nature writing, drawing as much from science as from literature, borrowing from the humor of Georges Perec and the poetry of Francis Ponge. With remarkable freshness and wit, he crafts a portrayal of a natural world dangerously threatened by industrial activity.

PRAISE

"Freely playing with the codes of nature writing while incorporating elements of a wildlife and flora identification guide, this delightfully offbeat and humorous text echoes the formalism of authors of the caliber of Francis Ponge."

Philippe Fortin, Les Libraires

"This book can be read in one go, a bubble in time, uninterrupted."

Maude Desbois, CIBL

"A unique writing style."

Min-Thu Le, Passion Montréal

HOW NOT TO BECOME A TRAVEL WRITER

Adrien Blouët

An anti-travelogue in a locked-down Japan paired with a hilarious reflexion on our quest for authenticity far from home

Notabilia (France, 2024) - 206 pp

One evening in December 2019, a young writer arrives at the southernmost tip of Japan with the ambition to settle down for a few months, find a job, write a novel, and learn Japanese. Nothing goes as planned: a few weeks after his arrival, a global pandemic breaks out, disrupting his projects and significantly extending his stay.

With humor and a good dose of self-deprecation, the author recounts his adventures, anxieties, obsessions and natural talent for procrastination, driven by an illusory desire for authenticity.

From the humidity of Okinawa to the bustle of Tokyo nights and through the deserted valleys of Shikoku, Adrien Blouët, a reluctant travel writer, offers with this book one of the most singular travelogue about Japan published in recent years.

Rights sold:

- Petite Bibliothèque Payot/Voyageurs (paperback)

PRAISE

Jean-Rémi Barland, Destimé

"A delightful book."

Elizabeth Philippe, France Inter

KAVANAGH

Esther Cross

A glimpse into the lives of the Kavanagh's residents—one of Buenos Aires' most iconic buildings—told through a series of interconnected allusive stories

Minúscula (Spain, 2025) – 176 pp

What do the Wilkinsons, the Soslands, the Pasos, Dr. D'Alessandro, Prince Olenski, and the other protagonists of this book have in common? They all live in the same unusual building: the Kavanagh, a skyscraper conceived as "a machine for living without setting foot on the street." This architectural marvel captures the gaze of passersby and tourists while also fascinating advertisers, filmmakers, and its own residents.

In a series of chapters, narrated by one of the residents of the building – a discreet writer – Esther Cross unveils slices of life that brush against one other, remain oblivious to each other, or intertwine. She also sketches the portrait of a city steeped in nostalgia and a world in flux, of where we, as mere witnesses, find ourselves losing our bearings.

PRAISE

"Cross writes these stories with short, sharp sentences that shift from reflection to irony, revealing a keen observation of the (il)logical reasons behind her characters' behaviors."

Ángel Berlanga, Página 12

"Throughout the book, an elegant humor and a Chekhovian economy of means prevail. Cross prefers to suggest just enough rather than say too much, and in most cases, a few elements are enough for her to construct a solid plot that effortlessly glides from the everyday to the absurd, supported by a poetic irony that uncovers the small tragedies of her characters without stripping them of their dignity."

Felipe Fernández, La Nación

THE AUTHOR

Esther Cross (Buenos Aires, 1961) is a translator and prolific writer. Considered a prominent figure of contemporary Argentine literature, her work has been awarded with prestigious prizes such as Premio Nacional de Literatura, Premio Kónex and Premio Fondo Nacional de las Artes. THE CYCLIST CONSPIRACY

Svetislav Basara

A brilliant satire of secret societies and complot theory by one of the most eminent Serbian contemporary writer

Dereta (Serbia) – 280 pp

The Cyclist Conspiracy tells the tale of a secret Brotherhood who meet in dreams, gain esoteric knowledge from contemplation of the bicycle, and seek to move in and out of history, manipulating events; the Brothers are part of a conspiracy so vast and so secret that, in many cases, the conspirators themselves are unaware of their participation in it. Told through a series of “historical documents”—memoirs, illustrations, letters, philosophical treatises, blue prints, and maps—the novel details the story of these interventions and the historical moments where the Brotherhood has made their influence felt, from the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand to a lost story of Sherlock Holmes.

Masterfully intertwining the threads of waking and dreams into the fabric of the present, the past, and the future, Svetislav Basara’s Pynchon-esque The Cyclist Conspiracy is a bold, funny, and imaginative romp

Rights sold:

- Open Letter (English)

PRAISE

"Basara is an author capable of making fun of absolutely anything."

Enrique Vila-Matas, writer

"Some books grow old with years, some are rejuvenated, some remain the same. But extremely rare are those that manage to force reality to change and adapt to what is written in them. Some twenty years ago The Cyclist Conspiracy seemed like postmodern brick-a-brack. Today, it is a historical record that grows truer with each passing day."

David Alabari, writer

"A hallucinogenic game infused with equal parts philosophy and parody that will captivate readers of Jorge Luis Borges and Flann O'Brien."

Publishers Weekly

THE AUTHOR

Svetislav Basara (Bajina Bašta, 1953) is the author of over thirty novels, short story collections, and essays translated into 10 languages. Les Allusifs (Québec, 2002) - 165 pp

Publication in the USA by Archipelago in April 2025

Hidden in the reeds floating on a pond next to the highway, a woman finds a baby bobbing in a shopping basket. Adopted by the Francoeurs, Hugues remains an outsider in his semi-family. At the same time, Habéké is adopted by a Canadian family and brought to Quebec after his own family dies of famine in Ethiopia. On the margins of their small town, the boys become sworn brothers, searching for their roots, desperate to return to exile, to a paradise called Ityopia.

Narrated by the bold and imaginative voice of Hugues, Sylvain Trudel's prize-winning debut novel is at times serious and at times fantastical. In their child's world, where Hugues and Habéké haven't yet learned the prejudices of adults, they embark on adventures, digging holes to China and building fantastical contraptions to take them to far off places, like their hero, explorer Roald Amundsen. Trudel writes with uncommon wit, and The Harmattan Winds is a feast of wordplay, rife with puns and wonder – perfect for devotees of Ali Smith, classic adventure novels like The Adventures of Huckleberry, and John Knowles's A Separate Peace.

PRAISE

"The Harmattan Winds is a beguiling fairy tale of a book, indebted as much to Bellow's Henderson as it is to the immortal Peter Pan, a slender novel of the great adventure that is growing up."

Rumaan Alam, Author of Leave the world behind

"The Harmattan Winds was a wonderful surprise. It's a lovely book and also a little erce. Full of provocative ideas and adventures, and that one-of-a-kind voice of Hugues is a constant delight. So vivid, so uirky, so oddly believable. A very endearing book."

HOUSE WITHIN A HOUSE

Nicholas Dawson

A meditation on the wiles of depression, illuminated by queer and diasporic experience

Editions Tryptique (Québec, 2020) – 165 pp

Weaving prose poetry, essay, autobiography and photography in mutual contamination, Nicholas Dawson relates his own deep depression, a state never fully gone, always cohabitant. Amidst this persistence, "the body and the pen bring a plural syntax of alternative knowledges into being, one which allows us to know the world better, to know ourselves better, to better love daybreak and this sun obstinately piercing the curtain with its brazen rays."

House Within a House tells the story of what walls the depressed person in, what keeps them wandering inside, and what finally gets them, somehow, out of the house.

PRAISE

"House within a house is a brilliant, scholarly, superbly written book. A narrative-essay-poetry in which all the people who have experienced depression can recognize themselves."

Mario Cloutier, La Presse

"Nicholas Dawson uses his poetic creativity to describe the house within a house—both the prison of the mind and the look and feel of rugs, floorboards, chair legs, and windowsills. His words and pictures make the dark corners and impasses a little less lonely. And chart paths for getting out of the house."

A CHOCOLATE DOLL

Amandine Gay

An autobiographical essay and striking plea to politicize adoption and rethink the concepts of family, filiation and identity

La Découverte (France, 2021) - 368 pp

Amandine Gay was born to an unknown mother and owns nothing of her past: no medical record, no family tree, no family memories. For her story not to be a sum of silences, traumas and dispossessions, she needs to write it. This book is a trace, an archive, a piece of the puzzle she tries to complete thanks to the political analysis of what happened to her.

If families are formed through adoption, it is because more precarious families have been destroyed. Whether it is a question of class relations, global inequalities or the colonial continuum, in the Western context, adoption is inscribed in a history of violence. Adoptees inherit this history.

A Chocolate Doll navigates between a poignant life story and affiliations with critical theories of race, cultural studies, feminist studies, decolonial studies and queer theories. Amandine Gay responds to the urgency for adoptees - and others - to open a field of reflection, based on their experiences and expertise, analyzing the power dynamics exercised in adoption, and questioning the conventional structures of parenthood.

Rights sold:

- Editions du Remue-Ménage (Québec)
- Fandango (Italy)
- La Découverte poche (paperback)

PRAISE

"The strength of the text is enhanced by its autobiographical aspect [...] . Amandine Gay's story captivates us, often revolts us, and touches us deeply, especially in the last pages, which are poignant. "

Erwan Cario, Libération

"A poignant and relentless intimate story."

Julie Hainaut, ELLE

"Speaking for herself, but also for all adoptees, Amandine Gay raises vital issues and does so with the authority of one who speaks from personal experience."

Catriona Seth, En attendant Nadeau

THE AUTHOR

Amandine Gay (1984) divides her time between research, creation and activism. She directed the documentaries Speak Up and A Story of one's own which also deals with the topic of adoption, following the journey of five adoptees. She is currently working on her second essay on how white supremacy shaped all the aspects of her life.
